NOTIFICATION.

BRITISH CONSULATE,
SHANGHAE, 7th November, 1861.

THE Undersigned has been requested by the Superintendent of Customs to notify to the British Community, that His Excellency will be compelled in future to have all Overland Parcels opened before they are handed to their owners.

His Excellency is driven to this step by the misconduct of some persons unknown, who, taking advantage of the immunity from search these Parcels have hitherto enjoyed, have on two recent occasions attempted to import munitions of war, by having the packages out overland to the nominal address of respectable members of this Community.

The Undersigned regrets that this step should have become necessary, and trusts the community will assist him in discovering the persons for whose misconduct they will have to suffer.

JOHN MARKHAM,
H M Vice-Consul in Charge.

NOTIFICATION.

With reference to the revised Provisional Regulations for British Trade on the Yangtsze River, instructions have been given by His Excellency the Superintendent of Trade at the Southern Ports, prohibiting the issue by the Customs of River Passes to vessels belonging to such Foreign Nations as have not a Treaty with China.

G. H. FITZROY.
Commissioner of Customs.

Office of Maritime Customs,
Shanghai, November 9th, 1861.

DIVINE SERVICES will be held in the American Episcopal Church at Hungchow, on Sunday Morning, at half-past 9 o'clock, when a Sermon will be preached by the Rev. William Muthead on occasion of the death of the Rev. Dr. Bridgman.

THE London Mail of 26th Sept., will be due in Hongkong on the 10th inst. and here on the 17th. Last year it arrived on the 19th November per Yang-tsze.

THE P. & O. Co.'s steamer with the Mail for Europe is appointed to leave on Sunday morning, the 24th instant.

AT a General Meeting of the members of the Library, held about a fortnight back, the attention was called to the fact that the Subscription List was lamentably low, and it was thence inferred that the part played by the institution in the education and amusement of the community, was far below that which might have been reasonably expected of it. Seven years ago, when the number of residents was hardly half what it is now, there were 115 members, last year there were 125, and this year little more than a hundred.

There are several causes to account for this. The first unquestionably is the rapidly-changing nature of the community, which deters new comers from paying subscriptions to an institution, the benefit of which they may not enjoy for three months. Young men are drafted off from here to the various ports lately opened, and the Library is thus deprived of many names which otherwise would doubtless figure on its subscription list. Yet provision has in some sort been made for this, half-yearly subscriptions are now accepted, and we believe that some arrangement for quarterly payments is in contemplation.

The second cause we think may be traced to the growth of the Settlement, its more varied society, and the superior attractions afforded, or rather offered, by other amusements. Many regular readers get out their own stocks of books. Romantic young gentlemen find more scope than formerly for the creation of those delicious joys and sorrows incidental to aspiring or blighted youth, and prefer the indulgence of their own emotions to sympathy with the heroes and heroines of novels. Worldly experience and personal observation take the place of knowledge derived from books, and though the latter cannot be dispensed with, there is no question about the value of the former.

With regard to the management o the Library, faulty as it is, for reasons we shall give by-and-by, we do not think that it is a cause of the decline in the subscriptions. A really reading man will have his book under whatever discouragements. He may not frequent the reading room, because it is uncomfortable, ill-lighted, draughty, or hot—he may constantly be disappointed in getting the books he wants, which seem to spite him by remaining out long over their due time for return and by hiding afterwards in the caverns under the reading room. But he pulls our national safety-valve, grumbles, abuses the Librarian, pays his next subscription, and reads on in spite of it all. How far new comers may be deterred from joining the institution by accounts of its discomfort and bad management, is a question worth consideration; possibly, if it presented greater attractions, the names of many residents, not now on the list, might be added to it.

About this time last year the question of the entrance fee of 10 Taels was brought before a general meeting; and, as sufficient money had accumulated in the Building Fund to provide rooms for the Library and the fee seemed to operate against an extension of the subscription list, it was abolished. Yet in the teeth of Adam Smith the number of members fell off again. The exodus to the new ports indeed began about this time; but where are the successors of the departed whom the Committe sought to allure by reducing the first year's payment? They are only as yet in posse.

We have spoken of the bad management of the Library, but should act very ungraciously were we to attribute this to the negligence of the Secretary or the Committee. No one who has not undertaken the first of these offices, can estimate the amount or the quality of the work entailed by it. It is not indeed hard labor; but it is worrying, unsatisfactory work, which the more efficiently it is discharged in one of its most important departments—that of reprimands to careless members—the more odium it entails.

The root of the whole matter is the inefficiency of the Librarian, and the impossibility of getting a Chinese who can and will do the work conscientiously and efficiently. It is true that the whole blame does not rest with him, for the laws are violated by members who know that the Librarian cannot resist their infraction of them. Two old works and one new one are permitted to be taken out at one time; but what can the wretched Asiatic do against a great intellectual cormorant, who flies in, flaps his wings in his face, dives into the shelves, and carries away a pile of books? At best, he timidly mentions the rules against this rapacious proceeding, but a little determination on the part of the enemy scares him into silence, half the books only are put down on the memorandum given to the official, no record remains of the disposal of the others, and it is very good fortune if they ever turn up again. One monster—doubtless a literary "roc"—carried off a volume of the Encyclopædia Britannica some years ago, which, to this day, has never been returned; and at this moment there are above a hundred volumes missing from the Library, many of them odd volumes of large works. A cruel list was sent round by the Secretary last week, with but very poor results as far as the return of missing books is concerned.

There is no remedy for this, but the appointment of a Librarian who can ensure such respect as will prevent the laws being broken. But to induce a European to give four or five hours a day to such work a fair salary must be offered, and the income of the Library cannot now afford this. Thirty or forty new subscribers, however, would place the Committee in a position to engage such a man; and if he were well supported by the Secretary and the Community, a wonderful change for the better might soon be effected. Two hours in the morning and two in the evening might be allowed for his attendance to issue books and receive those returned by the members. One Chinese should always be in waiting at other than these hours, to look after the reading room and attend to the wants of visiting or honorary members. All these things are mere questions of detail for the Committee to settle: but nothing can be done without more money. A better catalogue is now being compiled, and it will doubtless be free from such absurdities as placing Mr. Sponge's Sporting Tour under the head of "Voyages and Travels."

We shall not obtrude any didactic impertinencies upon our readers in the shape of recommendations to cultivate a taste for reading. We will keep religiously aloof from quotations from the De Studiis and Sir John Herschel's addresses on this subject, though we could hardly be blamed were we to give them, and might further the views of the Committee by extracting some of the beautiful passages to be found in them. But we earnestly lay the matter before the Community, and invite the subscriptions of such of its members as have not yet placed their names on the list. A good library should be a matter of public interest; and we can promise in the name of the Committee that if the means are provided to carry out their plans, they will render it a very valuable and important institution in this place. Its best supporters can hardly say this of it at present.

EXPORT OF TEAS.

To the Editor of the
NORTH-CHINA HERALD.

SIR,—Referring to the exports of teas for the several months during the past few years, it will be observed that the month of June is now becoming a very eventful one. You will recollect the commencement of the shipping season in the old "Company's" time dated from October, but it has now gradually come to June; and in this month, during the current year, no less than 6,000,000 lbs. of new season's tea were included in that of the old season's export from Foochow, and 300,000 lbs. from Hankow viâ Shanghai, and this, will no doubt, be considerably added to for the future.

The question, therefore, with me—and, I doubt not, many others here—naturally is, will it not be better to conclude the season's export either on 31st March or 30th April? Should you think this communication worthy of insertion, with the view of bringing the subject before the Chamber of Commerce and the mercantile community generally, you will oblige,

OBITUARY.

WHEN a man, who has secured to himself a large share of the respect and affection of his fellow men, is removed by death, a custom meet to be observed, prescribes the duty of recording the chief incidents of his life and a kindly expression of the just estimation and affection in which he was held.

Such a man has recently passed from our midst. But a few days since he was vigorously discharging all the duties of an active life; now we miss him from our streets, and the places that once knew him shall know him no more for ever.

The only qualification the writer can claim for the task he has undertaken, is a most cordial respect and affection for the deceased, and a friendship extending over more than twenty years. For the dates and facts relating to his earlier days he is indebted to a paper prepared by the deceased himself.

ELIJAH COLEMAN BRIDGMAN was born April 22nd, 1801, in Belchertown, Massachusetts, U.S.A., of pious parents, whose ancestors were among "the Pilgrim Fathers," and settled in New England—Andrew Warner in 1636 and James Bridgman in 1640.

He was converted at the early age of eleven, and became a communicant of the Congregational Church in his native town in his twelfth year. Soon after he became deeply interested in the missionary work, and it was his desire to carry "the glad tidings" to the heathen that determined him to prepare for the ministry. His academical studies were pursued in his native town, his collegiate at Amherst, and his theological at Andover. He was ordained a missionary to China on the 6th October, 1829, and on the 13th of that month sailed for China, where he arrived the 19th of February, 1830, and was welcomed by Dr. Morrison, then the only Protestant missionary in this Empire.

He resided in the foreign factories at Canton, except during the political troubles occasioned by the war with the English, when he was temporarily resident in Macao and Hongkong. He was married to Miss Eliza J. Gillett, at Hongkong, on the 28th June, 1845, and in June, 1847, removed to Shanghai. In February, 1852, on account of ill health, both he and Mrs. Bridgman embarked for New York, where they arrived in June, and re-embarking in the October following, returned to Shanghai in April, 1853. Since his return he has enjoyed until his last sickness remarkably good health, and was abundant in labours. He preached on the last Sabbath he spent on earth in the Chapel of the London Mission, and was not considered in any danger, although he had been unwell for some time, until Wednesday, the 30th October.

From that time his disease, an inflammation of the bowels, became rapidly worse and his strength began to fail. During all the painful hours that he passed through until the closing scene, no murmuring expression, no impatient word escaped his lips. All he would say was "This is hard work." On coming into his room on one occasion, I asked him, "Well, my good brother, how are you now?" He answered in a strong and cheerful voice, "I am going to My SAVIOUR" Blessed assurance! This it was that supported him during all those painful and languishing hours: an unseen Saviour, present by faith, gave him his meek and patient submission to the Divine Will, his courage to face the king of terrors without a fear, and enabled him to fall asleep at last, as quietly as an infant slumbers on its mother's bosom.

He passed away, as he had lived, quietly and calmly, and closed his earthly career at half-past twelve o'clock on the 2nd November, 1861.

He had a strong desire to live and clung to the hope of recovery up to the last night. He freely expressed his wishes and hopes, but in entire and unfeigned submission to the Divine Will. "My Saviour," he would say, "knows best. His will be done." And this desire to live was for no selfish ends—it was to complete his unfinished works of love; to finish his translation of the Bible; to assist his beloved partner and worthy help-meet in training her young charge, and to guide in "the narrow way" the few communicants that had been gathered around the altar erected in their house.

We can scarcely go far astray in the estimate of our deceased Brother. He produced the same impression upon all who had intercourse with him. Guileless simplicity and earnestness were his distinguishing characteristics. He was guarded in his speech, and singularly pure, harmless and without offence. We doubt if there is a person living, who has ever felt himself aggrieved or injured by him by word or deed. His natural temperament was quiet and collected. He was not a man of unusual talent. The amount of good he was enabled to effect was owing to his singleness of aim. He walked straight on, not rapidly, but without turning aside, or loitering by the way, and he has accomplished a length of journey which few men of quick parts attain to. His influence was cumulative. He was always increasing the sum by his gentle consistent Christian deportment, and never did he by one unkind or foolish word or deed, detract from the already accumulated amount. This was the beautiful point of his character; it was of one piece—consistent throughout. He perhaps never performed a single great act in his life; yet such a life, we may surely say, is itself a GREAT ACT. Great, in that it ascribes all to the Divine Grace that inspires it.

Dr. Bridgman was not only an earnest, laborious missionary, he was perhaps still better known among the members of the foreign community in China, as a public spirited citizen. He did not limit himself to making known the Gospel. He was warmly interested in everything that could promote the good of either the Chinese or the foreign community; with this view, he was for many years the editor of the Chinese Repository. Up to his decease, he was one of the most active members of the Chinese Branch of the Royal Asiatic Society, and the editor of its journal. He was compiling a large and full map of the Yang-tsze-kiang. He was a frequent contributor to this paper; indeed we cannot enumerate all the efforts he was making to this end. Such a man naturally attracted to himself a large share of the affection and esteem of his fellow men. Dr. Bridgman was universally esteemed and respected in this community. By his personal friends he was sincerely loved, and his memory will be warmly cherished.

I shall never forget the closing scene in his chamber of death. His faith seemed to repose wholly on his Blessed Saviour. When asked shall we now unite in prayer, and commend your spirit to our Heavenly Father; he answered, "To my Saviour."

His anguished wife and sorrowing friends attempted to sing at his request

"Rock of ages cleft for me,
Let me hide myself in thee."

Their broken voices and choked utterance gave evidence that though triumphant faith was there, nature will claim her tribute, and tears of affection flowed freely at thought of the long long separation at hand.

"The chamber where the good man meets his fate,
Is privileged beyond the common walk
Of virtuous life, quite in the verge of heaven."

Our beloved, our venerable friend is not lost, but has only gone before. Let us thank God for his example, and endeavour, relying on the Divine Grace, which was the secret source of his loveliness of character, to imitate his pure and harmless, yet active and useful life.

The writer can never forget the gentle, pure, guileless, earnest, consistent friend and brother whose loss he now deplores.

IMPERIAL PROGRESS OF THE NEW EMPEROR FROM ZEHOL TO PEKING.

FROM Peking we have advices to the 27th Oct. containg a translation of a proclamation posted on various parts of the city walls, informing the inhabitants that the new Emperor is on the eve of entering the metropolis of his Empire, and warning all his subjects to observe the most reverent demonstrations on the occasion, under certain pains and penalties.

TRANSLATION.

The specially appointed office in charge of the united protection of the inner city of Peking, issueth the accompanying prohibition for the information of all.

It is a matter of fact that all the shopkeepers and residents in the different lanes and streets under and within the jurisdiction of the Manchu community, have with perfect unanimity and propriety carried out the objects of the "Union for the guard of the city." However, as the time for return of His Sacred Majesty in his chariot is approaching its crisis, it behoves every shopkeeper and householder the more to rouse himself to exertion and care; and while, in their nightly patrols they have sanction to use the gong, [also] at their drilling and practice times, they must in no way loosely indulge in the use of firearms, as if to promote and further quiet.

After this one time of prohibition, any want of conformity to the above rule, or irregular adoption of like practices, hitherto in vogue, shall assuredly—as soon as found out—be visited with unmitigated severity in the locality where such acts may have been perpetrated.

Take care then that you be careful in no way to disobey this injunction.

October, 1861.

TAIPING PROCLAMATION.

On the 9th of the 9th moon the Elder Brother descended [upon our Earth] and took upon himself the weighty responsibility—to destroy the Imps and exterminate the demons.

In the above extract from a proclamation it will be seen that there is a paragraph having special reference to a certain observance required on the 9th of the 9th moon. Yesterday being the 9th, in accordance with the above, an amusing procession and ceremony took place. Great demonstrations of this were made soon after 8 o'clock, for sundry guns, fire-arms, crackers, &c., were discharged at intervals and numerous standards suddenly shot up all round. Shortly before the hour of 9 these began concentrating (themselves) in one spot on the shore, directly opposite to the ship, where a platform had been erected for the reception of the great one who was about to deliver his discourse. The noise of fifes, &c., suddenly sprung up, and the Commandant (who acted as clergyman) preceded by flags to any amount, and his rear brought up with a similar number, together with a goodly train of dirty little boys, appeared in sight, and presently took his seat on the stage erected for him. Having done this, a salvo of three guns, followed up with a general salute of small arms all round, announced that the great man was about to preach. He (the Commandant) was gorgeously decorated, and maintained throughout a most majestic countenance. His head was adorned with a crown of gilt brown paper, and his dress was of a blue material, variegated most chastely with dragons and divers other animals equally as ferocious, and calculated to command an equal amount of respect from all.

His suite were robes of gold or gilt (it does not matter which we say), and their heads were covered with very peculiar apologies for caps, the shape of which we must allow was slightly original. The entertainment opened with a prayer from the high individual, the substance or subject of which we are unprepared to give you. At the termination of this, three guns were fired, and the boys with their matchlocks under their arms and their eyes shut (when firing), blazed away with vigour.

This continued for some minutes without cessation, until the person finally, with a loud voice, proclaimed to the multitude that the time for kneeling had arrived. Upon this they all fell on their knees, with the exception of one individual, who would not do so, whether from ignorance or whether under the impression that he might soil his trowsers we do not know. This unruly conduct did not pass unobserved, however; and his imprudence was speedily visited with the condign punishment of a thrashing, fiercely administered as a reminder, by an individual whose duty it appeared to be to preserve order, and who was armed with a tolerably long bamboo for the purpose. Obstinacy was effectually quelled, and the insubordinate knelt with the rest. His face was very pale and great fear was depicted on his countenance, for the blows over the head and back which he had received, appeared to have somewhat startled him and removed all his original courage. What took place during the time of kneeling I do not know, for our friend at the head of affairs disappeared from his perch and was lost amongst the throng. The crowd of small boys and bannermen being excessive, and being in the rear guard, his movements were lost to our vision, and we missed the opportunity of being edified with what he said. He doubtless delivered sundry exhortations and words of good advice, which we should imagine were attentively listened to by all, and if not so, they ought to have been; for the power of elocution resident in him being by no means limited, and he being moreover, as he stated, one of Heaven's true disciples, his wise sayings ought surely not to have fallen to the ground, but on the contrary gone into the heart of each, and been duly pondered over and digested there.

As soon as the multitude had regained their legs, we were enlivened with strains of music from the band; but unfortunately they did not fall upon our ears with good effect, for they only appeared as a conglomeration of discordant sounds, concerning the tones of which a Chinaman and a foreigner might be wont at times to differ. Firing of crackers, &c., now took place, and continued as before until called to order as at the first. Our friend at the head of affairs then opened his discourse by reminding the multitude of the importance of observing the day, and moreover requiring of them the due observance of the five festivals; and requesting that whenever any of these seasons should occur, as well as on the Sabbath day, the inhabitants of this and other places would wash up their saucepans (pots), wash their clothes, sweep their houses out, keep their hands and persons clean, put their tables to rights, &c. If wealthy, they are to make great sacrifices; if without money, then to reserve a part of their food as a gift offering to compensate for benefits received. He said that it was quite impossible for Heen-fung (or Hien-fung as he always calls him) to destroy the Heavenly Dynasty, as long as the people continued loyal subjects of the Heavenly King. He then quoted foreigners as an instance of being non-worshippers of demons and false gods, and endeavoured to impress upon them that there was no occasion for them to adhere to idolatry. Our Heavenly King, said he, has commanded us to slay all false worshippers, therefore let us move onward and exert our courage to the utmost to fulfil his commands. Those who are true believers (he continued) shall neither lack food nor yet clothing, and ere the space of 100 years we shall all go to Heaven. This is just a word here and there of what our friend said, and by no means all. The Commandant's colleague then mounted upon his legs and, instead of exhorting them to observe the festivals and so forth, he commenced by telling them to practice the art of war diligently, with a recommendation to those commanding battalions of the Heavenly army to drill their men daily without remission. He then complimented himself on his own, and those on the benches on their personal appearance, completing his sentences by an encouraging word or two to the effect that they would all become officials "one day." This must have been satisfactory and highly gratifying to all of them, and left them with no hope no doubt of bettering their state at some future period. When any officials come to see you, said he, you must yourselves treat them kindly and take care of them. The Heavenly King cannot attend to all their wants. If you are required to arouse from slumber at the fifth watch of the night, to proceed to battle, you ought to be up and ready prepared at the 3rd watch, so that your work may be shown and that you may not be taken unawares. This having ended, the individual at the head of affairs then delivered a brief oration, and concluded his discourse by requesting the troops to separate; and the standards, which before were all gathered round the Yu, forthwith arranged themselves in their same position as they assumed previous to the discourse. The proceedings were then closed with a general salute all round, and the Commandant walked in procession under his Wan-min-san, and the other individuals composing his suite mounted their ponies and rode off, the whole adding brilliancy to the scene, both in appearance and in the harmony elicited from their several instruments. The whole was of brief duration, the whole of the proceedings from the commencement to the finale, having only occupied the space of one hour, from 9 till 10.

We have much pleasure in presenting to our readers, a second chapter on the Upper Yangtsze Expedition, as it is not only interesting in the matter, but the narrative is written in a charming style; more suited to a standard book of travels, than the ephemeral columns of a newspaper. Its vivid descriptions will attract the notice of the most obtuse mind; while the occasional philosophic reflections of the writer on the social and political condition of the country passed through, will commend it to the careful perusal of the learned and studious. This is especially the case, when our author reviews the scenes of desolation, where the harlequin-dressed Tai-pings hold their demon rule.

FIVE MONTHS ON THE YANG-TSZE, WITH A NARRATIVE OF THE EXPLORATION OF ITS UPPER WATERS.

No. 2.

A Naval Squadron Inland.

The squadron being re-assembled at Nanking, Admiral Hope left that place to continue his progress up the river on the 2nd of March, with the Coromandel, Cowper, Nimrod, Hornet, and Attalante; the Centaur and Bouncer (gun-boat) being left at anchor off the suburb. The same evening, being favoured by the wind and deep water—for we were now beyond tidal influence—we reached Wahoo, a town, or rather the remains of one, in possession of the Rebels. To-day's run was fifty-six miles on the S.W. course, the average width of the river being about that of the Thames at Woolwich. On the way, a little above the town of Tai-ping, we passed between the East and West Pillars, but of which I am not able to endorse the pleasing description given by the historian of Lord Elgin's Mission; and as for this being the gate of the Yang-tsze, one might as well suppose a gate half-way up a carriage drive. On this day, too, we passed from the Province of Kiang-su into its inland neighbour, An-hueí; and the next few days showed us in it, and the little corner of Kiang-sí, some of the finest scenery on the river.

Why China should ever have been called a "vast plain," or "enormous fertile valley," is to me inexplicable. More variation of surface perhaps does not occur in any country, and where we should be most inclined to look for such features, namely, on its great artery, there is variation enough to please the most sceptical tourist. Commencing at the mouth of the Yang-tsze-kiang there is naturally a considerable extent of flat alluvial land—the delta of the river; and there can no doubt the ocean held its sway; but soon we come to hills and high lands, and at Chung-kiang one is delighted with the steep and rugged cliffs. About Nanking the country is prettily broken into ridges and hills, and before reaching far above this, mountains shut in the river on either hand. In fact, I think the scenery between Wu-hoo and An-king (usually spelt Ngan-king) equal to any part of the river. It is of course not such bold and near scenery as is found on the upper waters; but the fine ranges of mountains well removed from the river, whose broad expanse is not broken by low islands, and again widening into lake-like form—the beautifully partially wooded slopes of the mountains reaching down into the highly cultivated lower land—the occasional villages—the collection of reed huts gathered on the immediate bank, as if in doubt whether the ground were as safe as the water—the distant pagoda, marking the site of a town approachable only by some narrow canal-like creek; and then life made apparent by numerous boats with their white cotton wings—the fisherman attending his ingenious dip-net—some coolies trusting where none
